TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY

By Russell Kay.

Now that the boys have this "Big Game" and "Little Game" all settled, it would seem a good idea to get together and get out what can be done about it.

Personally, I can't speak with authority on the subject of it, but I do know that the in most of our government activities is costing us.

As we've still got the "cow" to worry about, with its "moo," "baw" and "moo." Weary legions must sit in to arguments from those who contend that a calf on a trip about the country is dangerous, while it is a trip about the country that a calf can usually manage.

As the Florida State Junior League of Commerce leading the drive to cattle from our state, cattle owners are rather the little cry of "MILK" and "BUTTER," but not one cent "MILK" and "BUTTER."

With both a Milk Board and a Cattle Commission in operation, it does seem kind of unnecessary to worry off on the department and leave the cow on their shoulders.

As we are to continue the practice of decorating our highways with a cordial invitation to Florida Zephyrs while we are viewing the controversy of the motorist's standpoint, would the poor harassed motorist be better off to blow his horn when he don't have to blow it? Why the motorist's attitude is right when a cow doesn't even to switch her tail?

As a state of good roads, as a state which bids the motorist to come from all America, there is no excuse for permitting cows and pigs to roam freely back and forth in front of speeding cars. More than 30 persons are killed annually and many more injured as a result of automobiles striking of the "Deerlayer." Doc is all hot and bothered, because a flock of ticks, reformed from a dipping vat, have been riding on the swamp and he ain't been able to capture 'em.

According to Doc, these ticks are a menace to the health, happiness and general well being of the deer-eyed cow who, when driven off the highways, go into the woods to suck.

He claims these reformed cattle ticks wait 'till an unsuspecting cow arrives in the neighborhood of their swamp home, then they jump a ride on a passin' deer and transfer to the cow and St. Louis canal. Here at Livestock Board ain't been able to do anything about it.

New Doc wants to kill off the deer and figures if the ticks have so transportation he can keep 'em under seign in the swamps and eventually they will starve to death.

According to Doc, we've spent over a million bucks trying to wipe out the ticks and now the way they stand in the way is a few bucks and a little more doc.

On the other hand, the State Game Department, the Florida Conservation Council, and a lot of wild-eyed sportsmen say they've worked darn hard to protect the deer and a buck or two here and there, and they're not gonna let Doc Knapp or anybody else go deer huntin' out of season with no limit.

AS OTHER EDITORS SEE IT

COWS AND HUMANS
 Cows continue to be more important than people so far as the state legislature is concerned. Only one member out of 20 of the house livestock committee voted to pass a bill making owners of cattle civilly liable if their animals cause highway accidents.

Representative Dan McCarthy of St. Lucie county, who introduced and pleaded for this bill, said it would not require fencing, as all other measures, but it might have that effect. The owners could decide for themselves how they should keep their livestock off the road, unless they were ready to assume the chance, as few would.

Perhaps a more direct law would be preferable, one making it mandatory for livestock to be barred from the highways, providing penalties for violation. If the state legislature, if this or other committees propose to adopt such a measure, the livestock committee can be forgiven for turning down this plan. Otherwise it cannot.

As a state of good roads, as a state which bids the motorist to come from all America, there is no excuse for permitting cows and pigs to roam freely back and forth in front of speeding cars. More than 30 persons are killed annually and many more injured as a result of automobiles striking owns, an intolerable situation. The backwoods legislators should realize Florida has grown up, that this is a new age, and that human lives ought to be regarded as more precious than the right to exist to graze on the open range. The selfish interests of cattle owners should not be paramount to the general welfare.

LAKE LEVELS
 It is going to be necessary for us to follow through on the question of water levels in Lake Okechobee and the St. Louis canal. Here at Stuart our chief interest is that the canal stay closed from November to May, at least, because if it is permitted to go wide open in this period, our fishing is so badly spoiled that we lose heavily on our winter business. Community leaders took this matter up with Congressman Mark to select some months ago, as well as with war department engineers, and we have received wholehearted cooperation from both of these. But the factor in this situation which approaches the problem from a different point of view is that it behooves us to watch developments.

The farmers who raise crops on the three islands in the south end of Lake Okechobee, particularly Torrey and Krammer islands, have hired a lawyer to collect damages for the losses they sustained when the level of Lake Okechobee got too high last year. They have sent this attorney to Washington to confer with Congressman Wilcox about drafting a bill to reimburse these growers from the United States treasury.

The growers contend that the government levee caused water to flow over their farms and they are demanding compensation in the aggregate amount of about $500,000.

Representative Wilcox has promised to introduce a bill appropriating funds to pay them. It is hoped the growers get reimbursed, but I also think that the level of Lake Okechobee can be controlled in such a way as to damage nothing the farmers of the Lake region and the Isaak Waltons of Stuart and vicinity.

Gov. Cone Explicit—

 $200,000 a year from the department's budget.

Legislators received the outline with thanks. Its specific recommendation was just what they wanted.

Some of the cabinet members differed to an extent with the governor's suggestions.

Secretary of State R. A. Gray, while agreeing with many other points, took issue on the jumping of funds in one "common pot."

"When you put every thing in one pot, you will have the worst mess in the state government you ever saw," he said.

Comptroller J. M. Lee said, in effect, "certainly we can get along on existing revenue, particularly if increase in gasoline revenue is used for some other purpose than being divided between the road department and the board of administration for bond debt reduction."

The comptroller would appropriate definite amounts to the road department and to bond reduction, from the gasoline money and take over for other purposes.

The governor's outline set definitely at rest the report fostered by his critics that had made only a skeleton outline of his ideas for the state's fiscal welfare, and did not have specific suggestions to make. Governor Cone was explicit in his statement to the legislature, preceding his announcement of the plan, that he had no intent to dilute to them in any way, that he had no "pet bills" to pass, and that he had refrained, until their request was made, from enlarging upon the text of his legislative message on April 6.

For better sight, a light should be both sufficient and evenly distributed.

"I CAUGHT HIM ONE DAY IN May"

You'll be proud as a peacock when you've landed some of those larger, gamier, more plentiful fish abounding in Florida's waters during April and May! No need of going back home without a fish story and the evidence to back it up!

Make the most of Florida's best fishing time. Watch Mr. Sullfish hurl himself clear of the sun-pangled water. Thrill to a "rug-of-war" with that silver king, the tarpon. Feel the never-give-up plunge of the black bass at the end of your line. Hundreds of other varieties will challenge your angling skill.

In late Springtime, Florida's fish are more ravenous than any other time of the year—more gamey, more plentiful. Any good angler will tell you that.

So stay awhile longer. You'll get some fishing that is fishing. And you'll be able to say to your friends: "I caught him one day in May."

Stay thru May

BEST TIME OF THE YEAR!
